LIVING ROOMS

pitched perfect The relationship between the environment and architecture forms an important part of the work of GM architects. This villa in Bali is a perfect example of the inside-outside feel that defines modern tropical living.

left The sloping wooden roof is undoubtedly one of the most striking features of the living room in the villa and makes a definite and bold statement—open as it is on one side to the garden and pond beyond. The organic contours of the space are further enhanced by the use of tactile and soft-toned stone. The color scheme of gentle golds, creams and natural wood reinforces the warm and tranquil mood of the room.

above A secluded, private patio with its own miniature garden is the perfect place for early breakfast or afternoon tea. Cool white walls and stone floors create a harmonious balance between the exteriors and interiors.
